"This move represents an exciting development for SkillSet," noted Clint Armstrong, CEO. "We have grown our team to 22+ employees in the last few years since late 2015 and are pleased that the new space can accommodate our growing presence in Los Angeles. We have already planned to hire an additional 5 people to accommodate our growing presence in the Los Angeles market, bringing our headcount to close to 30 people by the end of 2017. While remaining cost-conscious, we are designing the space to look sharp and have a great feel in order to create a showcase to help attract future hires."

"We have already begun putting capital to work in order to accelerate our business plan," Armstrong continued. "We have particularly focused on our skilled labor and light industrial team and to that end we have already expanded our recruiting team from one to five for this office. Manufacturing is a key focus for Skillset in 2017 and beyond. We know that in order to meet our objectives of being a market leader in Staffing and Recruiting as well as in the executive and retained search space it's necessary for us to hire the best and brightest talent that we can find. We intend to continue adding talented recruiters, safety personnel, and key account managers as well as make key hires in other areas to build a team that can support the current demand while positioning us for further growth going forward."
